Impulse

After years of war and destruction, the greatest resource of a country is the solidarity of its inhabitants. Our project aims to cultivate this wealth, in order to use it as the foundation of a new society.

If building a two-part infrastructure to respond to the urgency seems to be the more rational solution, it implies to erect temporary shelters for the short and the medium term before the reconstruction of the residential area. Instead of thinking of the project in different steps, why don't we consider it as a process, including the participation of the community ?

The idea of our project is to gather six families in clusters which will be shelters as much as places to create new social interactions. Indeed, the modular structure design allows to transform the initial emergency tents into different housing projects achieved by families themselves. In such a process, professionals just have to provide the frame and advice the inhabitants for the construction of their houses.

All these clusters are gathered around an economic and social area : the Roof, where the first public infrastructures can develop before being built permanently in the surroundings of this symbolic core.
